

Choosing the Best Moving Method

In the past, when you were relocating you had only two options –use professional movers or go for a do-it-yourself move. Since there are so many moving companies out there today who provide different services that it can be challenging to decide how you’re going to make your next move. The moving method you choose is one of the most important decisions you will make. (Read more...)

To help you through the decision process we have provided some important points you should consider before decide on your moving method:

Moving Truck Rental Service

For a do-it-yourself move, get competitive quotes from truck rental companies. Make sure your DIY move is manageable with your time and schedule because you will be responsible for everything including packing, loading, driving and unloading the truck. Depending upon how far you are moving, and how much stuff you have to transport, the DIY method may or may not be the best and most cost-effective method for you.

You-Pack, They Drive

With this moving method you still provide the loading and unloading but the “You Pack” movers do the heavy driving. Typically, the company you choose would drop off a trailer at your moving location that would be picked up by the company after it is loaded. You would have a pre-agreed upon timeframe to load the truck for your move and then they would have their drivers transport your goods for you.

Full Service Moving Company

The premier level of service is hiring a professional moving company. There are many types of movers to choose from including: local movers, long distance movers, international moving companies and relocation companies. These movers are trained professionals who can make sure your entire move is taken care of for you. They can pack, load, transport and unload all your possessions for you. It is worthwhile to get competitive pricing from multiple movers and select the one that best meets your needs and budget.